Shooting guide

Talking head · 12 scripts · Vertical format for Reels, TikTok and Meta ads

CAMERA

- Phone on a tripod, vertical (9:16), at eye level and about three feet away.
- Shoot in 4K at 30 fps with a fixed frame rate (not auto). Lock focus and exposure on your face.
- Framing: mid-chest up, head centered with a little room above. The edit switches between a close-up and a panel at the bottom, so stay in the center of the frame and don't lean in or back.

LIGHT AND BACKGROUND

- Light always in front of you, slightly above eye level: a window or a soft light. Never a window behind you.
- A tidy background, three to six feet behind you. Wear a color that's different from the wall: the edit cuts you out so your head rises above the panel, and contrast keeps the cut-out clean.
- Plain clothes, no thin stripes or big logos. Change outfits every two scripts so it doesn't look like it was all shot on the same day.

AUDIO

- This matters most. Use a lavalier mic (wireless or wired to the phone).
- Record in a room with furniture or curtains so there's no echo. Turn off the AC and the fan.

HOW TO SHOOT THE TAKES

- One file per script. Hit record, say the whole script and stop at the end. Don't stop recording between lines.
- Go paragraph by paragraph: read the block, look at the lens and say it. The silences between blocks get cut in the edit.
- If you mess up, pause for two seconds and repeat the whole sentence from the start. The edit keeps the last complete take.
- Record the main hook and the two alternates back to back at the start. Same video, three openings to test.
- Talk to the lens, not the screen, with a bit more energy than normal. When you say “step one, two, three,” count it with your hand.
- Say the lines with numbers (1%, 25%, 30 vs. 40 dollars) more slowly: that's where the animations land.
- Before moving to the next script, watch 10 seconds of the take with headphones to check audio and focus.

EDIT

- Recommended template: Glass Explainer Reel. It switches between close-ups and a panel with you at the bottom and each step's animation building above, with real screenshots and numbers. No B-roll needed.

Clicks But No Sales

HOOK

If your ad is getting clicks but nobody's buying, stop changing the ad.

ALT 1 Your ads might be working fine. Your store might be the one losing the sale.

ALT 2 Before you kill that ad, check these three numbers.

MESSAGE

An online sale doesn't get lost just anywhere. It gets lost in one of three steps, and every step has its own number.

Step one: the click. If fewer than 1% of the people who see your ad click on it, then yes, the creative is the problem.

Step two: the product page. If lots of people land there but almost nobody adds to cart, the ad did its job. The page is what's failing: the photos, the price, the reviews or the offer.

Step three: checkout. If they add to cart and don't buy, there's almost always a surprise at the end. Shipping that costs more than expected is the number one reason people abandon a cart.

Find the step where the number drops and fix only that one. Changing the ad when the problem is checkout means paying for more traffic just to lose it in the same place.

At Maison Enterprises, this is the first thing we check, before we touch a single dollar of ad spend.

AI Won't Make You Go Viral

HOOK

You asked AI to write your content and it came out sounding like everyone else's. That's because you asked it the wrong thing.

ALT 1 Stop asking ChatGPT for content ideas. Do this instead.

ALT 2 How we write a hundred hooks in one afternoon with AI, without sounding like a robot.

MESSAGE

AI doesn't know your customers. If you ask it for content ideas for your brand, it gives you the average of the internet. And the average doesn't stop anyone's scroll.

We do it the other way around: you bring the raw material, and AI multiplies it.

Step one: collect the 20 questions your customers ask you the most. In DMs, on sales calls, in the comments. Those are real words from people who buy.

Step two: give those questions to the AI and ask for five different hooks for each one. One direct, one with a number, one about a common mistake, one with a story and one that goes against the grain.

Step three: pick the best ones and record them with your own experience. AI brings the volume. You bring what nobody can copy.

That's how you go from not knowing what to post to a hundred hooks in one afternoon.

Stop Testing Ads. Test Hooks.

HOOK

Shooting ten different ads to see which one works is the most expensive way to advertise.

ALT 1 One recording. Five ads. Here's how we test creative without burning budget.

ALT 2 Your ad isn't bad. Your first three seconds are.

MESSAGE

Most people decide whether to stay or keep scrolling in the first three seconds. That's where almost everything is won or lost.

So instead of shooting ten ads, shoot one. One body with your best message, and five different openings.

You launch five versions: same video, five hooks. Since the only thing that changes is the start, you know exactly what worked.

The number you watch is the percentage of people who make it past three seconds. As a benchmark, above 25% you're doing well. Below 20%, that hook gets turned off.

You keep the winner, and the next week you record five new hooks to compete against it.

One recording, five tests, and every week your best ad gets a little better.

Your Sales Team Has A Clock Problem

HOOK

Your sales team doesn't have a closing problem. It has a clock problem.

ALT 1 You paid for that lead. Your team called it the next day.

ALT 2 The cheapest fix for your sales team takes five minutes.

MESSAGE

A lead who filled out your form five minutes ago is still thinking about you. One from five hours ago has already talked to your competitors, or forgot they filled anything out.

Studies on response time keep showing the same thing: your chances of reaching and qualifying a lead drop hard after the first few minutes.

What we set up with our clients is simple. The lead comes in, the rep gets an instant alert on their phone and calls in under five minutes.

If they don't pick up, a text goes out that same minute, followed by a follow-up sequence over the next few days. Most sales don't happen on the first attempt.

Before you ask your team to close better, measure how long it takes them to call. It's the cheapest fix you'll make all year.

45-55 SEC · B2C / B2B PROGRAMS

Nobody Buys Your 12 Modules

HOOK

If your ad explains everything your program includes, that's exactly why it's not selling.

ALT 1 Nobody has ever bought a program because of the bonus module.

ALT 2 The four-part order behind every program ad we write.

MESSAGE

Twelve modules, three bonuses, group calls, a community. It's what took the most work to build, and what the buyer cares about the least.

People don't buy content. They buy getting from where they are to where they want to be, and the reason it'll work this time.

That's why every program ad we make follows the same order. One: the problem, in your customer's exact words. Two: why what they already tried didn't work.

Three: your method, explained in one sentence. Four: the proof, a real case with a concrete result.

The modules show up at the end, on the page or on the sales call. Never in the first few seconds.

And it works the same whether you sell to people or to companies. The problem changes, the order doesn't.

You Don't Need More Traffic

HOOK

Before you raise your ad budget, do this math.

ALT 1 More traffic won't fix a store that loses money on every sale.

ALT 2 The number that decides if you can scale your store, and it's not ROAS.

MESSAGE

Let's say every sale costs you 30 dollars in ads and your average order is 40. After product and shipping, there's almost nothing left. Raising the budget just multiplies that problem.

Now raise your average order to 55. Same ad, same cost per sale, and suddenly every customer leaves you a profit.

Three ways to do it this week. One: bundles. Group the products people already buy together and price them so it's a better deal than buying them separately.

Two: free shipping starting just above your average order. If your average order is 40, free shipping starts at 50.

Three: an offer right after checkout. The customer already entered their card, so adding one more product is a single click.

More traffic grows a business that already works. A bigger order value fixes one that doesn't yet.

Your Creative Is Your Targeting

HOOK

You're still picking interests in your ads like it's 2019. Meta stopped working that way.

ALT 1 The best audience for your ad isn't in the targeting settings anymore.

ALT 2 Why the same budget gets you better customers with broad targeting.

MESSAGE

Today Meta decides who sees your ad mostly by looking at who stops, watches and clicks on it. Your interest list matters a lot less than you think.

That means your video is your targeting. Whoever you talk to in the first three seconds is who Meta goes out and finds.

So if you sell to three types of customer, don't build three audiences. Make three videos.

One for the busy mom, one for the business owner, one for the beginner. Each one calls out its person in the first line, with their problem and their words.

Launch them with broad targeting and let the algorithm do what it does best: find more people like the ones who are already watching.

Fewer audiences, more creatives. That's the shift that's working for our clients right now.

The AI Ad That Cost Zero To Shoot

HOOK

This product video cost us zero dollars to shoot. Here's when that's smart, and when it'll wreck your brand.

ALT 1 AI ads work. Just not the way most brands are using them.

ALT 2 Should you make your ads with AI? Here's our honest answer.

MESSAGE

AI can now create product shots, scenes and full videos without a studio. And used well, it's a huge advantage.

Where it works: testing. Ten backgrounds, ten scenes, ten angles for your product in one afternoon, so you find out what sells before you spend on a real shoot.

Where it doesn't: anything that pretends to be real. A fake customer giving a fake review isn't content, it's a lie. And people can tell faster than you think.

Our rule is simple. AI for the product, the scenes and the volume. Real people for the testimonials and the face of the brand.

And once you find a winner with AI, that's the one worth shooting for real.

They Visited. They Left. Now What?

HOOK

Most people who visit your store leave without buying. Showing them the same ad again is the mistake.

ALT 1 The people who almost bought from you are your cheapest customers. Here's how to bring them back.

ALT 2 Someone visited your store yesterday and left. Here's what they should see today.

MESSAGE

Someone who visited your store already knows what you sell. Showing them the same ad that brought them in tells them nothing new.

They left for a reason. Doubt about quality, the price, shipping, or they just got distracted.

So the ads they see afterwards need to answer that reason. One ad with real reviews. One that answers the most common question. One with an offer that expires.

And split by how close they got. Whoever only saw the product gets reviews. Whoever left something in the cart gets the reminder and the offer.

Ads to new people bring them in. Ads to people who already visited close the sale. They're two different jobs.

Booked Calls That Never Show Up

HOOK

If people book a call with your team and don't show up, the problem started the second they booked.

ALT 1 You're paying for calls your closers never get to take.

ALT 2 Three messages that get more people to show up to your sales calls.

MESSAGE

A no-show isn't someone who changed their mind on the day. It's someone who forgot why they booked.

Between the booking and the call there are hours, sometimes days. If nothing happens in that gap, the interest goes cold.

Here's what we set up. Right after booking: a short video from the person who will take the call, saying their name and what they'll go over together.

The day before: a real result from a client in a situation like theirs. One hour before: a personal text from the closer, not a robot.

Every message reminds them why they booked. A higher show-up rate is more sales without spending another dollar on ads.

Three Emails That Sell While You Sleep

HOOK

If your store doesn't have these three automatic emails, you're paying for customers and letting them walk away.

ALT 1 The cheapest sale in your store is the one you get from a customer you already have.

ALT 2 Set these up once and they sell every single day.

MESSAGE

You pay to bring every customer in. These three emails make sure you don't pay twice.

One: abandoned cart. Someone left a product in their cart, you remind them within the hour, and again the next day with the reviews of that product.

Two: after the purchase. Thank them, show them how to get the most out of what they bought, and a few days later suggest the product that goes with it.

Three: win-back. If a customer hasn't bought in a couple of months, a message to bring them back, with a reason to come back now.

You set them up once, and they work every day without you. In many stores, these emails end up being a big part of the monthly sales.

Steal Your Best Closer's Words With AI

HOOK

Your best salesperson is closing with words nobody else on your team knows. Here's how to steal them with AI.

ALT 1 You have hundreds of hours of sales calls recorded. Nobody's using them.

ALT 2 The sales training your team needs is already sitting in your call recordings.

MESSAGE

Every team has one closer who just closes more. And when you ask how, they say: I don't know, I just talk to them.

The answer is in the recordings. Take their last ten calls that closed and get the transcripts.

Give them to the AI and ask three things. Which objections came up the most. Exactly what they said to answer each one. And which questions they asked before giving the price.

In an hour you have an objection playbook in your best closer's own words, and the whole team can use it on tomorrow's calls.

And bonus: those same objections are your next videos. If one person asked it on a call, a thousand people are wondering the same thing.
