HOOKS ALTERNATIVOS · PROBÁ LOS 3

"Four languages by 25. Here's the part nobody wants to hear."
"People think I have a talent for languages. I have a system."

02 CUERPO

Spanish is my native language. Then came English, then French, then Italian. [AJUSTAR: en qué orden y a qué edad]

And for years I did it the school way: grammar charts, vocabulary lists, tests. I could conjugate a verb, but I couldn't order a coffee.

What changed everything was simple: I stopped studying the language and started living in it.

Music, series, YouTube, people, all in that language. Speaking before I felt ready. Every single day, even for 15 minutes.

That's it. That's the 'talent'.

So now I want to do it the other way around: teach you Spanish the way I actually learned my languages.

02 CUERPO

In school I had English for years. [AJUSTAR: cuántos años] I knew the rules, I passed the exams... and the first time a native spoke to me, I froze.

Then [AJUSTAR: qué pasó: un viaje, un trabajo, una serie, una pareja, un amigo] and suddenly I had a reason to understand.

I watched things I actually liked, with subtitles in English. I repeated sentences out loud like a crazy person. I talked to people and made a million mistakes.

In a few months I could hold a conversation. Not perfect. Real.

The difference wasn't the teacher. It was hours of real language, and having a reason.

If you took Spanish in high school and remember nothing, it's not your fault. You just never got enough real Spanish.

And you know what? I never made that mistake again. That's the thing about mistakes: the embarrassing ones are the ones you remember forever.

In Spanish, the classic one for English speakers is this: you want to say 'I'm embarrassed' and you say 'estoy embarazada'.

Which means... 'I'm pregnant.'

If you're embarrassed, say 'me da vergüenza' or 'qué vergüenza'.

So go make mistakes. They're the fastest teacher you'll ever have.

But the real thing is this: in every language you get a slightly different version of yourself.

I'm funnier in Spanish. More direct in English. [AJUSTAR: cómo sos en francés e italiano]

You get to laugh at jokes you'd never understand. Have conversations with people you'd never meet. Feel at home in places that aren't yours.

And Spanish opens more doors than almost any other language: more than 20 countries and around 500 million native speakers.

How I'd Learn Spanish in 3 Months (Starting From Zero)

HOOKS ALTERNATIVOS · PROBÁ LOS 3

"3 months, 1 hour a day. Here's the plan."
"You can't be fluent in 3 months. But you can do this."

02 CUERPO

First, let's be honest: in 3 months you won't be fluent. But you can hold a real, simple conversation. That's the goal.

Month 1: sounds and words. Spanish only has 5 vowel sounds, learn them in week one. Then the 500 most common words with a flashcard app, 20 minutes a day.

Plus 20 minutes of easy Spanish you can almost understand. Videos made for learners. Don't study it, just watch.

Month 2: open your mouth. A tutor online, 2 or 3 times a week. Learn the past tense. Write 5 lines a day about your day.

Month 3: conversations. Three a week, minimum. Series with Spanish subtitles. And write down the 20 mistakes you make the most, and fix only those.

One hour a day. Every day. That's 90 hours. Most people never get there in years of classes.

03 TEXTO EN PANTALLA

HOOKS ALTERNATIVOS · PROBÁ LOS 3

"The 6-month Spanish plan I wish someone gave me."

02 CUERPO

With 6 months you can go from zero to real conversations about almost anything in your daily life.

Months 1 and 2: the base. Sounds, the 1,000 most common words, present tense, and one magic structure: 'voy a' plus a verb, to talk about the future.

Months 3 and 4: speaking. A tutor twice a week, a language exchange once a week. Past tenses. Podcasts on your commute.

Months 5 and 6: living in Spanish. Your phone in Spanish. Series without English subtitles. Think in Spanish when you're alone: 'now I'm cooking, now I'm going to the store.'

The secret isn't the plan. It's not breaking the chain. A bad 15-minute day still counts.

"Fluent in a year isn't a dream. It's math."
"Here's what one year of Spanish looks like when you do it right."

02 CUERPO

One hour a day for a year is about 365 hours. Add the music, the series and the podcasts and you're way past that.

Quarter 1: the base. Sounds, the most common words, present and future.

Quarter 2: speaking. Tutor, language exchange, past tenses. You'll feel stupid. Good. That's the phase where most people quit.

Quarter 3: volume. Series, podcasts, books for learners. Start the subjunctive, slowly.

Quarter 4: real life. A trip, a Spanish-speaking friend, a job, a class in Spanish about something you love, like cooking or salsa.

Fluent doesn't mean perfect. It means you can live your life in Spanish. And a year is enough.

Day 2: greetings and the 20 words you'll use every day. Hola, gracias, por favor, quiero, tengo, ¿dónde está...?

Day 3: 'quiero' plus anything. Quiero un café. Quiero ir. Quiero aprender español. One verb, a hundred sentences.

Day 4: watch 20 minutes of Spanish for beginners. Understand 10%? Perfect.

The future tense in Spanish has its own conjugations. You don't need them yet.

Voy a comer. I'm going to eat. Voy a viajar. I'm going to travel. Voy a aprender español. I'm going to learn Spanish.

[AJUSTAR: confirmá cuáles usaste vos y reordená según tu experiencia real]

Number 6: Duolingo. Great to build the habit, terrible to actually speak. Use it as a warm-up, not as your method.

Number 5: HelloTalk or Tandem. Free chats with natives. Amazing once you know the basics.

Number 4: Language Reactor. Netflix and YouTube with two subtitles at the same time. Click any word and get the translation.

Number 3: Anki. Flashcards that show you a word right before you forget it. Boring. It works.

Number 2: Dreaming Spanish. Hours of videos in easy Spanish, by level. This is where you learn to understand.

Number 1: a real tutor on italki or Preply. Thirty minutes of talking beat ten hours of apps. Speaking is the skill, and only speaking trains it.

02 CUERPO

Duolingo is great at one thing: making you open the app every day. That's valuable.

But tapping words on a screen isn't speaking. And it's not listening to real people talking fast.

So keep it, but change its job. Five minutes of Duolingo as a warm-up.

02 CUERPO

English: I love you. One phrase for your partner, your mom and pizza.

French: Je t'aime. Careful, add 'bien' and it gets weaker: 'je t'aime bien' is more like 'I like you'.

Italian: Ti amo for your partner. Ti voglio bene for family and friends.

Spanish does the same thing: 'te amo' is deep, romantic love. 'Te quiero' is for family, friends, and the start of a relationship.

Say 'te amo' on the second date and... good luck.

"Spanish vs French vs Italian: which one should you learn?"

02 CUERPO

French: beautiful, but you write 'eau' and say 'o'. Half the letters are silent. Hard to read out loud.

Italian: great pronunciation, but fewer speakers and fewer places to practice.

Spanish: you say it exactly how it's written. Five vowels, always the same sound.

Thousands of words you already know from English. Around 500 million native speakers, and in the US you'll hear it everywhere.

Easy to read, useful to speak, and somebody to practice with in every city. That's Spanish.

"The hidden bonus of learning Spanish."

02 CUERPO

When I learned Italian, I already had Spanish. And a lot of it was the same.

'Tengo hambre' in Spanish. 'Ho fame' in Italian. 'J'ai faim' in French. Same idea: you 'have' hunger.

'La casa', 'la casa'. 'Bueno', 'buono'. 'Mañana', 'domani'... OK, not all of them.

Spanish, Italian, French and Portuguese all come from Latin. Learn one well, and the next one is way faster.

So Spanish isn't just one language. It's a door to four.
